ALLIED HEALTH REGIONAL SKILLS PARTNERSHIP

HEALTHCARE EDUCATORS:

Many local schools, colleges, and universities participate in the Partnership to examine current healthcare industry trends so they may better match their students' training to employer needs. The Partnership has also recently funded the development of a curriculum that creates a career pathway for anesthesia technicians. There is no other program like this in the state.

Helping to influence and refine courses of study to meet future needs.

Initiating Career Pathway programs. Evolving needs demand new training preparations.

WORKFORCE DEVELOPERS:

Strengthening the partnership between community colleges and JobLink Centers is another initiative that was developed by the Partnership. Community colleges experts in five western counties developed and convened workshops highlighting allied health careers for area JobLink counselors. They designed brochures to help prospective students easily contact community colleges for information on allied health training programs.

Working with regional workforce development boards placing locally trained people into local jobs.

Hosting Career Showcases to promote healthcare job paths and connect people with educators and employers.

HEALTHCARE EMPLOYERS:

Healthcare is rapidly changing and finding qualified professionals is critical. Through Partnership meetings employers, educators and trainers, and workforce professionals discuss the trends that determine the workforce needed. These discussions lead to breakthrough partnerships and training programs that meet local employer demands.

Helping regional healthcare employers delineate their expected needs to current training programs.

Well-trained and matched employees make engaged, efficient employees.
